NYC Build it Back aids homes hit by Sandy

Moving on. The new program helps New Yorkers buy or rebuild their houses damaged by the storm.

Staten Island was one of the areas that was hardest hit when Sandy pummeled New York City. / GETTY IMAGES

When Sandy reached Staten Island last October, the storm surge slammed into Patricia Dresch's Tottenville home, ripping the house from its foundation and killing her husband and 13-year-old daughter.

Dresch has since been living in the rectory of her local church, but, as the first beneficiary of NYC Build it Back, she will soon move into a new home.

"I'm saying goodbye to something that I lived on for 30 years and now I'm able to move on to something, to start a new chapter in my life," Dresch said Thursday, when city officials announced her home was the first acquisition from Build it Back.

Through the program, the city bought Dresch's old home and the proceeds of the sale will help her purchase a new one.

"It is a great tragedy and we can't forget that, but we just have to go on," Mayor Michael Bloomberg said.

More than 23,500 New Yorkers and 5,000 Staten Islanders have registered so far with the program, which is funded using a portion of $1.77 billion in Sandy aid from the federal government.

When negotiating the aid package, Staten Island Congressman Michael Grimm said that he spoke about Dresch with Republican leadership.

"I made promises that I knew I had to keep somehow, some way," Grimm said.

The city set up six centers in Staten Island, Queens and Brooklyn to help those that were impacted by the storm sign up for the program.

In addition to acquisitions, New Yorkers can choose to repair or rebuild homes with extensive damage through Build it Back, but Dresch said she didn't want to live on the property she's known for 30 years.

"I couldn't go back down there anymore. ... That was it," Dresch said. "My family passed there."

But at her new home, which will be away from the water, Dresch has already made plans — to cook dinner for Bloomberg.

The mayor and other officials said they hoped the program and Dresch's story will help other Sandy survivors.

"We're here to help each other," Bloomberg said.

- The purpose of the program is to buy homes that were destroyed in the storm and help victims find a new place to live.
- Since the program started, more than 23,500 New Yorkers and 5,000 Staten Islanders have registered so far.
- The funding comes out of $1.77 billion in Sandy aid from the federal government.

Lawsuit. Family of missing autistic Queens boy to sue city

The family of an autistic boy who went missing from his school in Long Island City almost a full week ago is suing the city.

Avonte Oquendo, 14, was caught on video camera leaving his school around 12:40 p.m., but the family's lawyer, David Perecman, said Oquendo's mother wasn't called until 1:40 p.m.

And moreover, he said, a school security guard told Oquendo's grandmother that she saw Oquendo leave.

Perecman filed a notice of claim with the comptroller's office Thursday, the first step in proceeding with a lawsuit. DANIELLE TCHOLAKIAN

Park Slope stunned by death of boy

Heartsick. A 12-year-old was killed in a traffic accident near Prospect Park.

The death of a 12-year-old boy struck by a van while playing near Prospect Park Tuesday night has shocked the Park Slope community and prompted renewed calls for increasing street safety.

Sammy Cohen-Eckstein, 12, was playing near his home on Prospect Park West when his ball rolled into the street around 5:15 p.m., police said.

Running into the street to retrieve the ball, Cohen-Eckstein was struck by a white van. He was taken to Methodist Hospital but could not be saved.

The van's driver remained at the scene, and no arrests were made.

Cynthia Greenberg, the president of Kolot Chayeinu, Cohen-Eckstein's synagogue, expressed sorrow for the family's loss.

"Our hearts and prayers go out to them and all who knew and loved Sammy and are mourning his loss," she wrote in an email.

Local City Council member Stephen Levin said he had been in touch with the local precinct commander and had been told that police believed the driver had not been speeding.

Citing a string of recent pedestrian deaths, Transportation Alternatives called on the NYPD Thursday to use data-driven traffic enforcements to increase pedestrian safety.

Levin said he is in favor of expanding speed safety measures, particularly in the form of slow zones "in every residential neighborhood."

A slow zone pilot program kicked off recently in Boerum Hill. Levin believes Park Slope, a neighborhood known for being home to many families, should be part of the program.

Doug Gordon, a Park Slope local, has a 4-year-old daughter and an 8-month-old son and said that reckless drivers are a huge source of anxiety.

"The scariest thing I do every day is walk my kids to school," he added.

Other deaths

On Sunday, Oct. 6, 3-year-old Allison Liao was struck and killed while crossing a Queens intersection with her grandmother. Five-year-old Kiko Shao was hit by an Escalade in Sunset Park, Brooklyn.

- The NYPD has recently changed the name of their Accident Investigation Squad to the Collision Investigation Squad, signaling a tougher approach to pedestrian deaths.

Shutdown will only impact NYC Marathon starting line, officials say

The race will go on.

The government shutdown will only impact the starting line of the New York City Marathon, officials stressed Thursday.

"We will find a ways to run the marathon," Mayor Michael Bloomberg assured Thursday.

The Nov. 3 race, which was canceled last year after superstorm Sandy, usually begins in the federally-run Fort Wadsworth Park on Staten Island. The government shutdown shuttered the park just weeks before some 48,000 runners are expected to take part in the race.

But Washington gridlock will only alter the marathon's starting line, race organizers said. The race will still start from Staten Island.

"Regardless of the federal government's status on race day, the marathon will proceed and the starting location will not change," a New York Road Runners spokesperson said in a statement.

It's unclear what the contingency plans are and how the Road Runners plans to relocate security, volunteers and runners from the park.

"We're discussing that now," Staten Island Borough President James Molinaro said.

Study says Chinatown is steadily shrinking

Changes. The vibrant community is being transformed as the neighborhood becomes more gentrified.

Fueled by gentrification, New York City's Chinatown is shrinking, according to a new report. / GETTY IMAGES

Chinatown is shrinking, a new report suggests.

Fueled by gentrification, the Asian population and the number of family households in Chinatown and the Lower East Side have decreased in the last decade, according a report by the Asian American Legal Defense and Education Fund.

"Chinatowns have provided the city's immigrants with support networks and affordable housing for over a century," Bethany Li, staff attorney at AALDEF, said. "Gentrification and ongoing redevelopment projects, however, threaten to destroy the sustainability of these once-thriving immigrant communities."

The report, released Wednesday, details displacement of Asian Americans from Chinatowns in New York City, Boston and Philadelphia using Census data.

The steady decline of shared family households, which decreased 12.6 percent from 2000 to 2010, is the one of the most meaningful indicators of Chinatown's shrinking population in New York, the report says.

Iconic neighborhood

"Gentrification and ongoing redevelopment projects, however, threaten to destroy the sustainability of these once-thriving immigrant communities."
Bethany Li

As the neighborhood's family population retreats, young urban professions — also known as yuppies — are take over the vibrant neighborhood.

The number of people living in Chinatown in non-family households increased a whopping 21.4 percent in just a decade.

The report also points out that there has been a noticeable increase in high-end clothing stores and restaurants, as well as the emergence of several non-Asian restaurants, in traditional Chinatown boundaries.

Relaxed rent regulation and Chinatown's designation as a Business Improvement District in 2011 are largely to blame for this gentrification, AALDEF said.

"The gentrification that threatens to transform these areas is not just the natural result of market forces or the general evolution of these cities," Li said. "They are a very direct result of local policies of neglect, demolition and redevelopment that local governments have perpetuated for decades."

The report recommends that the city needs to reinforce existing low-income housing, as apposed to simply designating a portion of units as such in new developments.

Visit. Father to meet fugitive son Snowden in Russia

Edward Snowden's father arrived in Moscow on Thursday to visit the former U.S. spy agency contractor who is living in a secret location in Russia beyond the reach of U.S. authorities.

Lon Snowden's visit will focus international attention once again on Edward, who was holed up in the Moscow airport for weeks over the summer, and shows the human side of a story which Washington says is a case of treachery.

Accompanied by Russian lawyer Anatoly Kucherena, Lon Snowden went from the airport to a state television studio for a live interview, suggesting the visit was under government control. REUTERS

Pentagon wants US-made destruction unit in use for Syria's chemical weapons

The Pentagon is suggesting the world's chemical weapons watchdog use a U.S.-made mobile destruction unit in Syria to neutralize the country's toxic stockpile, officials told Reuters.

It gave a briefing on the unit on Tuesday to officials at the Hague-based Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons, who are deciding what technology to use for the ambitious chemical weapons destruction plan, two officials said.

Faced with the threat of a U.S. military intervention, Syrian President Bashar al-Assad agreed last month to a U.S.-Russian plan to destroy his sizeable chemical weapons program by the middle of 2014.

Initial talks between Washington and Moscow about where to destroy the stockpile included shipping it abroad, but it is illegal for most countries to import chemical weapons, making on-site destruction more likely.

Syria and the OPCW must make a decision on what technology will be used by Nov. 15.

"Our people's initial response was that it looks encouraging. It looks ideal," said a source in the OPCW who attended the briefing. "But we don't know how it will perform in the field and we would like to know the response from Syria and other countries with similar technology." REUTERS

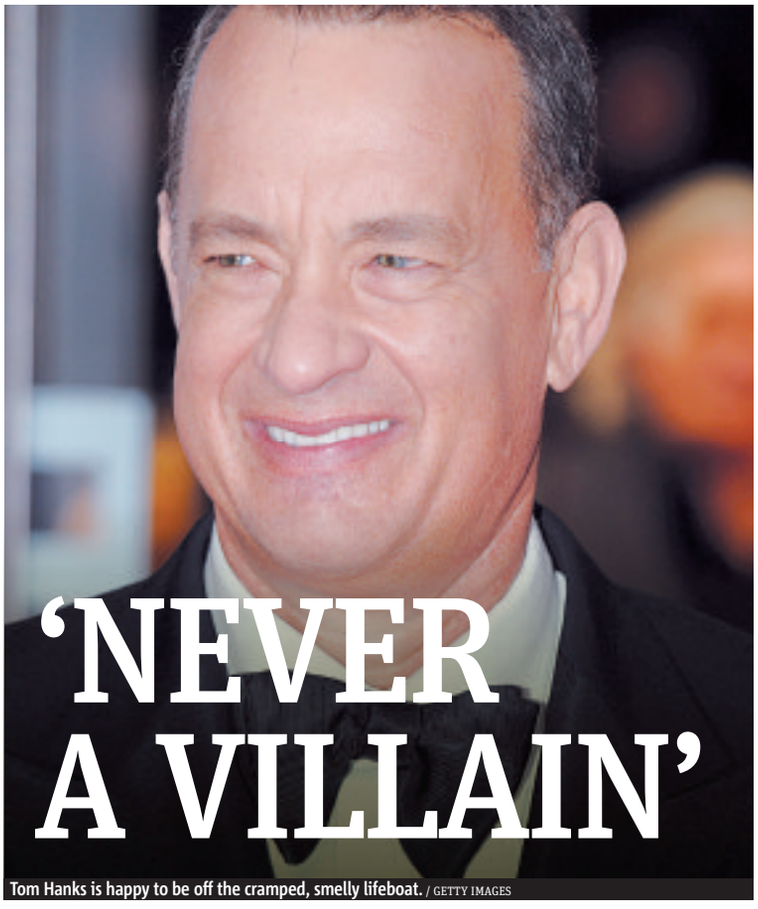
More Hanks

Reel life

Jim Lovell, 'Apollo 13' (1995): Hanks doesn't look like anyone but Tom Hanks, which is why he so seldom plays historical figures. But then again, who knows what astronaut Jim Lovell looks like?

Charlie Wilson, 'Charlie Wilson's War' (2006): Hanks played the hedonistic congressman, who helped support the Afghan mujahideen.



'NEVER A VILLAIN'

Tom Hanks is happy to be off the cramped, smelly lifeboat. / GETTY IMAGES

Interview. Tom Hanks talks about the difficulties of making "Captain Phillips," and how its subject isn't a hero.

Tom Hanks has faced plenty of acting challenges over the course of his career. But the tiny, enclosed lifeboat used in "Captain Phillips" definitely stands out for him. "I'm not a particularly claustrophobic person, but it was a very small space," he says. "Environmentally, it does a lot of the work for you. It's a very uncomfortable space. It smells horrible. The air is bad. It's hot. And you are right on top of each other. There's a lot of places to bonk your head and crack your knee. We all did that. Everybody had all sorts of scars."

Hanks stars in the film as the titular Capt. Phillips, whose cargo ship was famously hijacked by Somali pirates in 2009, and he insists those less-than-ideal working conditions were actually a huge help. "[Director] Paul [Greengrass] sets up an environment that is very realistic, and I can't imagine doing it any other way," Hanks says. "There's ways that may have been more pleasant but for everything we needed to go through as actors, that tiny, hot, cramped place with only two little windows on it was a great advantage for us."

The film's crew did try to make the cramped environment at least a little more tolerable, but to no avail. "At one point, they built rubber seats for some of the fight scenes," Hanks remembers, but "literally the rubber seats flapped around. So, we said, 'Guys, we don't think rubber seats are going to work.' So they took those out. We had a little bit of matting on the steel deck of the floor. But, by and large, it's a tiny space and it got pretty physical in there sometimes."

But really — and Hanks can't stress this enough — nothing compared to the smell in the replica lifeboat. "It stank horribly. It was stuffy and small," he says. "But the actual lifeboat smells even worse because it reeks of diesel fumes, and we had some vomit in there at some point. That's always fun. It was really filthy by the time we got out of there."

What is a hero?

Tom Hanks' cargo ship is hijacked by Somali pirates in "Captain Phillips." COLUMBIA PICTURES

'It's all relative'

While Hanks has racked up plenty of heroic roles — some based on true stories — he regrets to report that very little of that heroism has rubbed off. "I'm just a guy who's got a pretty good gig pretending to be other people," he says. "'Hero' is almost like a branded term now. It's bandied about all the time. In the end, heroes are ones who voluntarily walk into the unknown and try to do the right thing. It's all relative. Sometimes it's death-defying and sometimes it's just living up to one's responsibility."

Of course, how can Hanks get away with thinking of himself as a hero when even the guy he's playing this time out won't accept the label? "Richard Phillips doesn't view himself a hero. He was a guy who sat there and waited for the heroes to show up, which is different," Hanks says. "We all have times in our lives where we can either be a hero, a villain or a coward and I just hope that I'm a coward as little as possible, and hopefully never a villain. On the occasions when I have to be, I would hope to be able to do the heroic thing, but I've never been tested in any way, shape or form — other than facing down members of the fourth estate."

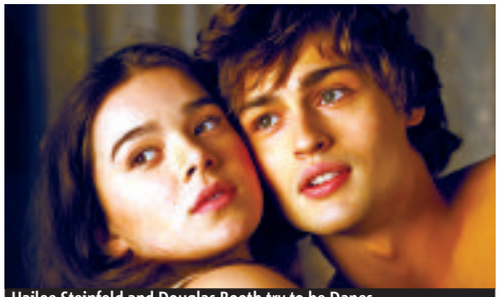
Shakespeare movie. The young generation gets the "Romeo and Juliet" it (probably) doesn't deserve.



Hailee Steinfeld and Douglas Booth try to be Danes and DiCaprio in "Romeo and Juliet." / RELATIVITY MEDIA

Review

'Romeo and Juliet'

Director: Carlo Carlei

Stars: Hailee Steinfeld, Douglas Booth

Rating: PG-13

Destined to become a classroom time-killer for teachers uncomfortable with the nudity in Franco Zeffirelli's 1968 film and wary of Baz Luhrmann's 1996 anachronistic spin, director Carlo Carlei's "Romeo & Juliet" is a curiously flat, passionless take on Shakespeare's tale of star-crossed lovers.

Absent the youthful ardor that's made the play a rite of passage for generations of heartsick teens, this is a stuffy, old-fashioned production shot on distractingly spotless sets. It lumbers along in search of a reason to exist.

"Downton Abbey" scribe Julian Fellowes has taken a red pen to the text, in an abridgment that alternates between streamlining and butchery, sometimes during the same scene. While crashing a costume ball, hotheaded young Romeo (Douglas Booth) falls head over heels for the innocent Juliet (Hailee Steinfeld), and their forbidden romance spins inevitably toward tragedy.

But you're not going to find much of a spark between these secret lovers. British TV actor Booth preens through the paces like a male model, typically content to let his bee-stung lips do the acting for him.

Steinfeld, who made such an indelible impression as the steel-backboned miniature spitfire in the Coen Brothers' "True Grit," is simply adrift here. She rushes through her lines as if trying to get them over with as quickly as possible — shocking, considering how deftly she handled the Charles Portis tongue-twisters in her breakout picture.

Paul Giamatti fares the best as Friar Lawrence, aiding and abetting these crazy kids and their clandestine marriage with an impish twinkle and a bushy beard that would make the Boston Red Sox proud. He is alone in savoring Shakespeare's poetry, effortlessly emphasizing the iambic pentameter while the rest of the cast flattens their dialogue into sometimes jarringly contemporary conversational rhythms. This whole affair feels like much ado about nothing.

Fake grindhouse. This sequel is much more like 'Meh-chete.'

Michelle Rodriguez plays the one-named "She" in "Machete Kills." RICO TORRES

Review

'Machete Kills'

Director: Robert Rodriguez

Stars: Danny Trejo, Mel Gibson

Rating: R

"Machete Kills," the not-quite-asked-for sequel to an underperforming franchise starter, is more of the same, only a little more spirited and a lot more inexplicably sci-fi. Gratuitous "Star Wars" references are de rigueur in nerd movies, but usually not in trash cinema that tries to set a record for the most decapitations.

It also features a lot more of Machete himself, the ex-Federale badass designed by director Robert Rodriguez for near-septuagenarian Danny Trejo. Rodriguez throws one insanity after another his way: a douchebag president (Carlos Estevez, aka Charlie Sheen), a schizo revolutionary (Demian Bichir), a mad scientist (Mel Gibson, having fun). It's impressive and tiring, but with a bit more craft (or a bit less) it might be on to something. MATT PRIGGE

Would you like to study the Bible – seriously?

Be diligent to present yourself approved to God, a worker who does not need to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Comic Con comes to NYC

It's time to don your tights and load up your wallet, because New York Comic Con is upon us! Running through Sunday at the Javits Center, this year's bigger-than-ever, sold-out event offers memorabilia and special guests galore — plus, of course, a panel dedicated to the 10th anniversary of "The Walking Dead." Tom Hanks tries to calm down Somali pirates in "Captain Phillips." / HOPPER STONE

Blink and you may miss its smarts

On a boat. "Captain Phillips" thrills, even though you know how it ends.

Thrillers based on true stories run into a conceptual snag: How can you milk suspense out of a story whose ending is already known? Merchant mariner Richard Phillips, the subject of the new "Captain Phillips," was not killed when he was kidnapped by Somali pirates in 2009. But this is a film by Paul Greengrass, the maker of the middle two, superior "Bourne" pictures. His cameras are always off the tripods; his editors are constantly moving to the next shot.

The first half gives Greengrass lots of meat to chew on. A cargo ship bound for Kenya draws the attention of impoverished Somali fishermen carrying automatic weapons. The cargo ship crew members are somewhat reluctant to fight pirates on their small salaries, but they manage to thwart the invaders — but not before the pirates capture Phillips, taking him captive on a lifeboat.

In a way it seems like a parody of a Greengrass film: His cameras shake and the music swells but the narrative is stuck in neutral for a good hour-plus-change. It's all herky-jerked up with nowhere to go.

But there's a sly intelligence to the film — a critique of how the most powerful nation in the world, with all of its forces, can be undone by a few dudes with guns. The pirates are types — the token hothead, the token nice kid in over his head — but they aren't faceless. They're introduced as poor, desperate men, but not as stock victims.

The script (by Billy Ray) doesn't go too far in humanizing the "villains," or in demonizing the Navy, though they have to resort to duplicity to get the job done. But it carries a theme running through Greengrass' films, from the "Bourne" movies to "United 93": America might may look impressive, but it's often an illusion, masking bureaucratic incompetence or worse.

Talking points

2 Hutcherson won't label himself

"Hunger Games" star Josh Hutcherson is pretty forward-thinking when it comes to sexuality, telling Out magazine that he considers himself "mostly straight" in a recent interview. "Maybe I could say right now I'm 100 percent straight, but who knows? In a f—ing year I could meet a guy and be like, 'Whoa, I'm attracted to this person,'" the 20-year-old actor says. "I've met guys all the time that I'm like, 'Damn, that's a good-looking guy,' you know? I've never been like, 'Oh, I want to kiss that guy.' I really love women. But I think defining yourself as 100 percent anything is kind of near-sighted and close-minded."

Jonas Brothers trouble

Looks like there's trouble in Jonas Brothers land, as the sibling musicians have canceled their latest tour two days before it was set to start, citing disagreements among the band members, according to People magazine. "There is a deep rift within the band," their spokesman says. "There was a big disagreement over their music direction." Fans who've already purchased tickets will receive refunds. As to what the future holds for the band, all their rep would say is, "It remains to be seen."

Metro was supposed to interview the Jonas Brothers on the day the news broke, but just before the interview, we received a note from their publicist saying, "We have to push back the interview a bit" because "the guys are traveling and everything is getting a bit delayed."

It looks like it may be longer than "a bit."

4 Scarborough divorced wife — a year ago

Joe Scarborough knows how to keep a big secret.

The host of MSNBC's "Morning Joe" quietly filed divorce documents in September of last year, TMZ.com reports. In January, the divorce between he and his wife, Susan Waren, was finalized. The former couple have a 10-year-old and a 5-year-old. How he kept this secret from the press for over a year, I have no idea. Give that publicist a raise!

This is the 50-year-old former Florida Republican congressman's second divorce — he split from his first wife in 1999. How are those family values working out for you, Joe?

"And the thing is, for me to say I wasn't a genius, I would just be lying to you and to myself." Kanye West

Jimmy Kimmel interviewed Kanye West on Wednesday night. As you can tell, West dressed up for the occasion. CREDIT: ABC

When Kanye met Kimmel

Is anyone out there surprised that the Kanye West interview with Jimmy Kimmel on Wednesday night devolved into a soapbox from which Yeezy delivered yet another lengthy, rambling, self-aggrandizing diatribe/sermon? No? OK, good, I'm glad we're all on the same page. It's so nice when that happens. (For the record, whenever I write these items, I'm operating under the assumption that we're on the same page, which is my page. WE ARE, RIGHT?)

Anyway, what DID sort of surprise me — initially — was how soft-spoken (dare I say demure?) 'Ye appeared at the beginning of the interview.

But Kanye, being Kanye, quickly warmed to the occasion and got down to the business of telling Jimmy What. Is. Up.

And what's up is that he's a damn creative genius, OK? And don't all y'all peons forget it. To be fair, he does acknowledge that you're not really supposed to say that about yourself, because it's a little weird and maybe it could seem like you're bragging or that you might be insane? (I don't know, genius is a label I apply to myself liberally, like when I MacGyver open a bottle of wine sans opener.)

If you missed it and don't have the patience (or time — like, if you're employed, maybe) to watch the five separate videos of the interview on YouTube, here are the highlights:

Kanye likes to make awesome stuff! (He does, sometimes.) Kanye thinks Kim K is every bit as deserving of a star on the Walk of Fame as the next creative genius. (She isn't, ever.) Kanye has a designer friend named Virgil. (I legit thought, at first, he was referring to the dead Greek poet, because, of course Kanye would be boys with an ancient Greek creative genius.) Lastly, Kanye doesn't care what ANYAY-ALLTHINK.

Throughout the whole thing, Jimmy kind of just fawned and smiled and stayed out of the way, which is, I guess, the only thing you can do when in the presence of Yeezus.

I will say, though, that Kanye's joke (which might not have been a joke, actually) about coming up (out) with his best s— on the toilet was pretty funny. I totally LOLed.

Negotiating is necessary

Re: 'Tea'd off about all the wrong things' (Metro, Oct. 10) Letter writer Joel Miller is once again spouting his liberal left dogma. Where does he get the idea that the Tea Party is excited and claiming that the government shouldn't pay its obligations? Anyone who has a mortgage or pays rent knows that you can't spend more than you have. If at the end of the month your bills are more than the cash you have, that you don't borrow more, but you find things to cut from your budget. That is what Obama and his brethren refuse to do, and something Congress has an obligation to force.
LEWIS CLABOUGH, VIA EMAIL

Get to work, Congress

An open letter to government: Thank you for taking even more out of our taxes. You scumbags (Republicans and some Democrats) have robbed the working man even more in your crusade against the president. Since affordable health care, among other things, is such a problem, feel free to dispense some stimulus checks if and when you and the president can come to an agreement. As for you, Mr. President, I understand that when it hits the fan, you try to ease the minds of Americans, but don't blow smoke up my poop-stack to try to lessen the blow. You promised change, yet you deploy troops to Syria, have us going through a depression and we're now looking for 2016 for a change. I understand that when you got into office, that it would take almost three terms to fix Bush's faux pas. I see it gradually getting worse. You, the GOP and Congress need to take a look at the haphazard state that this country is in and FIX IT!

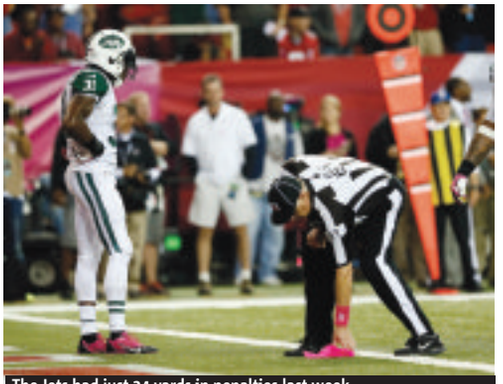
Jets' 'push' to stop penalties working

NFL. After setting a franchise record with 20 penalties in Week 3, the Jets are learning from their mistakes.



The Jets had just 24 yards in penalties last week in the win against the Falcons. / GETTY IMAGES

The Jets set a franchise record for penalties in a Week 3 win over the Bills. In the days immediately following that game, head coach Rex Ryan instituted a policy in practice whereby if a player get whistled for a call the whole team had to do push-ups.

The policy appears to have worked. The past two weeks show a clear decline in penalties. The week after the Bills game, in a loss at the Titans, the Jets cut the penalties in half — still a dangerously high 10. But in their last-gasp win over the Falcons on Monday night, they were whistled just six times for 24 yards.

"I do pushups every day, so it's not the push-ups," tight end Jeff Cumberland told Metro. "What it is is focus. It is being aware of it and keeping that in the back of your mind. It is having your antennas up and being aware about it. Then it carries over to the games like it is supposed to. It is all about the right focus."

Jets vs. Steelers: Three things to watch

After a dramatic win Monday night at the Falcons, the Jets need to settle back into the season this Sunday when they face the 0-4 Steelers. It may not be a statement game, but it is a game the Jets need to win in they want keep up their surprisingly strong start to the season.

We look at what it will take to beat the Steelers (Sunday, 1 p.m., CBS):

1 Those 0-4 Steelers
It has been a horrible start to the season for the Steelers as they've done everything counter to their principles. The Steelers are usually a tough, physical team who run the ball well but they are the second-worst rushing team in the league with just 58 yards per game. They're also woeful in stopping the run, at No. 25 in the NFL in run defense.

2 It's a trap!
Monday night's Jets win was necessary to make a statement. But with the Patriots ahead in Week 7, this Sunday is setting up to be a classic trap game against a winless Steelers team. It would be easy to overlook Pittsburgh and chalk this up as an easy win.

WILKERSON HAS FOUR SACKS THIS SEASON. GETTY IMAGES

3 What's the rush?
A big part of the Jets' success is predicated on the team getting to the quarterback and creating pressure. Sheldon Richardson is off to a strong start with 2 1/2 sacks while Mo Wilkerson has been dominant.
